MEMORANDUM IN SUPPORT OF MENTAL HEALTH FIRST AID TRAINING

TITLE OF BILL:

A local law to require certain county employees to receive mental health first aid training.

PURPOSE OF BILL:

To require mental health first aid training for certain employees of the County who have direct and consistent interaction with the public, thereby providing them with the proper tools to aid in identifying and assisting individuals with mental health issues.

SUMMARY OF PROVISIONS:

Implementation of the Mental Health Training Program

All current full-time and part-time employees of Nassau County who provide services directly to the public shall be required to receive eight hours of mental health first aid training. The training provided by the County will help employees recognize the symptoms of common mental illnesses and substance abuse disorders, de-escalate crisis situations safely, and initiate timely referrals to mental health and substance abuse resources available in the community. To ensure that all covered employees receive training, training shall be implemented through a one-third phase-in each calendar year from 2019 through 2021. Furthermore, all covered employees who receive mental health first aid training shall take an online re-certification course after the expiration of the previous three-year certification.

Types of Mental Health Training

The three types of mental health first aid training provided to County employees are as follows:

- Public Safety Oriented Training– helping public safety professionals better understand mental illness and addictions and providing them with effective response options to de-escalate incidents without compromising safety;
- Adult Oriented Training– educating individuals eighteen years and older in effective approaches to assisting adults experiencing a mental health related crisis or problem, such as anxiety, depression, psychosis, and addiction; and
- Youth Oriented Training– educating adults who regularly interact with youth to effectively assist young people who may experience a mental health related crisis or problem.

Exceptions to Training

Covered employees who have already been issued a certificate of completion for the type of mental health first aid training required shall be exempt, but shall be required to recertify.

JUSTIFICATION:

Mental Health First Aid is an evidence-based training program that teaches participants to identify, understand and respond to signs of mental illness. This comprehensive program was introduced by the National Council for Behavioral Health and has since been adopted in 21 other states providing training to police officers, first responders, corrections officers, social workers and human services professionals nationwide. Through the implementation of mental health first aid training, individuals are empowered with potentially life-saving knowledge, skills and techniques. The United States is facing a growing national mental health crisis, with one in five Americans combating mental illness. It is therefore more important than ever for Nassau County to adopt a proactive response and require specialized mental health training to County employees who provide services directly to the public.

While Nassau County endeavors to provide care to the mentally ill through the Department of Human Services and the Department of Mental Health, Chemical Dependency and Development, the reach of the County's diligent social and human service professionals is necessarily limited. Obviously, a mental health professional cannot be present at every interaction between County personnel and the public. The far-reaching benefits of Mental Health First Aid allow it to dramatically extend the County's capacity to serve residents experiencing mental health issues. Mental Health First Aid trainings are purposefully segmented to tackle the needs of public safety professionals, adults experiencing mental health related crises, and adults who regularly engage with youth experiencing mental health related problems. Participants are prepared to defuse potentially violent incidences, promote mental health literacy, combat stigma and connect individuals to the care they need.

The success of the program has been recognized worldwide with more than 1 million people engaged in training and has already been utilized in communities within Nassau County. Through bi-partisan efforts and the support of the former acting Police Commissioner and former Health and Human Services Commissioner, a series of Mental Health First Aid courses were hosted and enthusiastically incorporated into the Nassau County Police Department's recruit training curriculum. Pilot programs were simultaneously implemented in the Malverne and Westbury school districts putting educators and administrative staff in a position to identify early symptoms of mental illness in the young people with whom they engage. These well-received pilot programs have played a meaningful role in de-stigmatizing mental illness within our communities and empowering professionals to respond effectively when needed, thereby reducing the risk of tragic outcomes for those struggling with mental illness and those who come face to face with those in need.

Mental health first aid training is also an important tool in effective risk management in County operations. The risks associated with under-appreciating the significance of mental illness has and may continue to prove legally and financially detrimental to Nassau County. Legal claims and investigations associated with the handling of mentally-ill inmates within the County Correctional Center have proven costly to County finances. In January of 2011, the reported suicide of a Nassau County inmate, the fifth over a 12-month period, triggered a state of alarm, a rise in public scrutiny and a sizeable lawsuit against the County and its prison health care services provider. In response to these concerns, allegations and legal claims and investigations regarding inmate care, the County spent thousands of dollars on a personal service contract with an independent monitoring entity to facilitate corrective action plans at the Nassau County Correctional Center. While the County was criticized in news reports regarding the Correctional Center's medical personnel, mental health experts and public safety professionals highlighted the preventative role that properly-trained corrections officers could play in avoiding tragic and costly outcomes. Because of the integral job duties assigned to corrections officers, their daily encounters with inmates necessitates mental health first aid training. According to allegations in the New York State Attorney General's lawsuit, the inmate suicides were a result of numerous failures, including the failure to reliably provide important mental health services. In response to inmate deaths, the Nassau County Correction Officer's Benevolent Association and County Sheriff Vera Fludd called for the implementation of new training courses. During the Nassau County budget hearing on October 12, 2018, Sheriff Fludd specifically advocated for Mental Health First Aid as an effective training tool utilized by the latest correctional officer trainees. Expanding the implementation of this initiative throughout Nassau County will serve as a risk management tool to diminish liability and enhance the services provided by first responders, corrections officers, social services and human services professionals who consistently interact with the public.

Ultimately, Mental Health First Aid is a cost-effective evidence-based response to the persistent crises that face Nassau County residents and professionals. Enabling certain Nassau County professionals with the ability to recognize signs of a developing mental health crisis and address it before it results in tragedy should not be treated as an option, but rather a life-saving necessity.

RECEIVED
MASSACHUSETTS
CLERK OF THE LEGISLATURE
2018 OCT 30 P 4: 07

WHEREAS, according to the National Council for Behavioral Health, one in five Americans has a mental illness;

WHEREAS, untreated as well as improperly treated mental illness have social and economic ramifications that affects the health, safety, and welfare of every person within the County; and

WHEREAS, an essential component of mental health first aid is to train people so that they acquire the skills to help a person who is developing a mental health problem or experiencing a mental health crisis; and

WHEREAS, the National Council for Behavioral Health introduced Mental Health First Aid USA to provide training for first responders, corrections officers, social services and human services professionals in order to provide instruction on the techniques for recognizing and addressing mental health issues before a problem escalates into a tragedy; and

WHEREAS, expanding mental health first aid training as mandatory for certain employees of the County who have direct and consistent interaction with the public will provide those individuals with the proper tools to aid in identifying and assisting residents who have a mental health issue; and

WHEREAS, in addition to requiring mandatory mental health first aid training for certain employees of Nassau County, it is reasonable and necessary for the County to contractually offer mental health first aid training to specific community stakeholders who are routinely engaged with young people; now, therefore,

BE IT ENACTED by the County Legislature of the County of Nassau as follows:

Section 1. New Sections 22-18.0 through Section 22.18.5 are hereby added to Chapter XXII of Title A of the Nassau County Administrative Code to read as follows:

§22.18.0 Legislative Intent.

It is the intent of the Legislature of the County of Nassau to promote the general health, safety and welfare of the residents of the County by requiring all Nassau County employees who provide services directly to the public, including but not limited to corrections personnel, social services and human services staff, emergency medical technicians and emergency management personnel, to undergo training in the provision of mental health first aid. The Legislature finds that unrecognized and untreated mental and emotional disorders may play a role in recurring acts of mass violence such as active shooter incidents in our schools and workplaces. The Legislature further finds that young people and others who display persistently aggressive, anti-social or excessively socially withdrawn or alienated behavior patterns, or who have difficulty coping with social and family pressures, may be suffering from undiagnosed mental illness or emotional distress which can contribute to such violent incidents. Mental health first aid will assist in identifying individuals who can benefit from treatment and support, such as counseling or therapy. The Legislature further finds and determines that the consequences of untreated mental illness have been neglected for too long and that it is imperative that our society and its institutions vastly improve their ability to identify and address mental illness before it may lead to harmful or tragic consequences.

It is the judgment of this Legislature that prompt and effective first aid for mental illness is of equal importance to effective first aid for physical illness and injury and should be a top priority for the County. The Legislature further finds that mental health first aid training is customarily an eight-hour course of instruction which educates participants in the methods of effectively recognizing, identifying, understanding and responding to signs and behavioral manifestations of mental illness and substance abuse disorders. The Legislature recognizes that mandating mental health first aid training for certain County employees, creating training opportunities for employees to instruct others, and offering courses to individuals who frequently interact with young people, will potentially assist in averting tragedies attributable to suicidal, harmful or aggressive behaviors related to mental illness, reduce the stigma of mental health issues, and enable people who are suffering from a mental illness to receive the medical as well as emotional care and support they need.

§22.18.1 Mandatory Mental Health First Aid Training for Certain County Employees.

A. All current full-time and part-time employees of Nassau County who provide services directly to the public, including but not limited to specific corrections personnel, social services and human services staff, emergency medical technicians, and emergency management personnel, shall be required to receive eight hours of mental health first aid training, as specified in § 22.18.2 of this Title.

E. Based on the category of job duties assigned to County employees, the employees shall be required to undergo the following types mental health first aid training;

1. Category A and Category B direct service providers such as health and human services and social services professionals shall be required to receive training in adult mental health first aid and youth mental health first aid; and

2. Category C and Category D that includes first responders, corrections officers, deputy county attorneys and other public safety professionals shall be required to receive public safety training.

F. Upon completion of mandatory mental health first aid training, County employees shall be issued a certificate of completion, which shall be effective for a term of three years and sixty-days from the date of issuance.

§22.18.3 Exception to the Mental Health First Aid Training.

A. No training shall be required for any covered employee whose job title is listed in section 22.18.1 A(1) if the covered employee has already been issued a certificate of completion for training that meets or exceeds the mental health first aid training standards for certification as determined by the Nassau County Department of Health and Human Services or for the type of mental health first aid training required for the category and job title specified in section 22.18.2 of this Title.

- B. Notwithstanding the exception in subsection A of this section, the covered employee shall be required to recertify as required in section 22.18.4, unless a different recertification period is required by a training program that meets or exceeds mental health first aid standards as determined by the Nassau County Department of Health and Human Services.

§22.18.4 Re-certification.

- A. All full-time and part-time covered employees who receive mental health first aid training shall be required to take the online re-certification course no later than sixty days after the expiration of the previous three-year certification.
- B. All full-time and part-time covered employees who receive mental health first aid training shall file their training or re-training certificate of completion with the human resources officer of their department or office.

§22.18.5 Training Course.
